

Hey FED! Here's How To Partially Placate Germany!

Presented February 2014 by Charles Savoie

There's a simple suggestion I wish to field for relieving pressure on the Federal Reserve Bank of New York relating to Germany's formal demand for the lawful return of its gold. The figures I'll use are ballpark only based on the latest stats I've seen, but the concept will be clear! Using a 295 ton figure for German gold still due and owing from the NYFED, here's a straightforward proposal Germany might agree to for alleviating this serious gold debt. We have all been told by regulators in D.C. there's no malfeasance in the pricing of silver. Now let's turn this mendacious assurance against you metals suppressors! The gold to silver ratio as I write this I round to the nearest whole number---silver is being priced at the rate of 64 ounces to correlate to one gold ounce. Though this ratio is historically absurd and even more so is geological folly, we will use this ratio because we're told COMEX is an honest commodity price discovery market!

The Futures Industry Association would concur that COMEX silver quotes are free market. With people from Morgan Chase, Barclays and Goldman Sachs on their board, it's all we could expect <http://www.futuresindustry.org/board-members.asp> This $1250 gold price will never allow mining to produce enough gold to ever accomplish restoration of Germany's gold; and it's not as if all gold output can go to only one claim until the claim is satisfied. And gold miners played no role in causing this situation. Personal property owned by all directors of all regional FED banks and their management should be seized in its entirety and used to buy gold to be shipped to Germany. Jamie Dimon of JPM is another NYFED director. This doesn't address the larger theft of Fort Knox bullion ingots. To borrow Oprah Winfrey's worn out expression, we say "You say what?" to Treasury Secretary Jack Lew.

Current figures show over 127 MOZ silver on the COMEX in the "eligible" inventory. So! There we are! Nearly everyone now knows what the suggestion is! That 127 MOZ silver converts to a touch over 3,950 tonnes silver <http://www.metric-conversions.org/weight/troy-ounces-to-metric-tons.htm>

Dividing the 3,950 tonnes by the ratio to gold of 64 to 1 yields 61.72 tonnes gold equivalent. Since some 5 tonnes of gold have to date been restored to Germany, shipping the 127 MOZ silver to Germany in lieu of a portion of the lawful gold debt, would reduce the outstanding gold debt from 295 tonnes down to approximately 233.28 tonnes of gold. Of course, this COMEX eligible silver is hardly for sale at anything like the tragicomical joke rate of $19 to $20 the ounce, substantially more funding must be applied to free this eligible silver from the lawful owners, who are in no legal or ethical way responsible for malfeasance by FED officials who also gleefully ransacked Fort Knox.

This is no suggestion to make so much as one ounce of this COMEX eligible silver saleable on any coercive basis to the NYFED. The owners must be offered a rate convincing them it's a free market rate, rather than a FED inspired, Silver Users Association inspired, or rate governed by an entity <http://silvermarketnews.com/articles/Who> that wishes to remain unknown (recently profiled!) May I suggest since the FED can simply create funds, it should be a trifling administrative matter to do just that. The sum is quite minor next to the sum of FED bank bailouts! Less than $2.8 billion is the minimum required! I suggest $125 per ounce for this special situation, which is really only $90 per ounce due to the discriminatory 28% capital gains tax rate on bullion, from which quarters we all know at least in a general sense, whence it came. It could be treated as a class action situation--- that silver is owned by many persons and entities. They may wish to bargain for a higher rate, realizing when the inevitable transpires, and metals prices can't be smothered any longer, they'd be done out of future gains by a peanut-paltry $125 per ounce price.

There must be no provision banning these recipients from placing orders for any precious metals, or from buying these in any venue, online or brick and mortar. However, the media should be banned from disclosing any of their specific identities. Payments to them should be on an immediate basis. I realize some of this silver may be owned by shady interests like Morgan Chase. So be it. It would be constructive to have less silver in their clutches.

The Silver Users Association must have no input into the proposal, because Germany wants something superior to dollars. Perhaps Germany would care to offer the silver to the industrial silver users cartel in 25 years, or whenever the mines are mostly depleted and the world must turn to seafloor mining of polymetallic nodules.

There is in my not unique view, the chance this 127 MOZ silver COMEX figure is to some sizeable extent, fraudulent accounting. In such event, we will see horseflies land to lay maggots on all open sores of metals suppressors, which we are going to see in any case. The offer may be extended to any private owners of bullion silver in any of the 50 States, with a participation deadline of 2 months after the deal is set.

To see what fate may await precious metals thieves and suppressors, see <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=> starting at 2:00 through 3:10. However, jumping off buildings to the sidewalk or pavement is a real life option more of them may care to avail themselves of. For others, hopefully a life without parole term awaits with cellmates who were foreclosed.

The German Ambassador to the UN, Peter Wittig, might consider a speech denouncing the theft of his nation's gold <http://www.new-york-un.diplo.de/> The U.S. UN ambassador, Samantha Power, could reply that Germany "doesn't understand monetary science."

Ambassador to Germany John B. Emerson could assist working with Peter Ammon, Ambassador of the Federal Republic of Germany to the U.S. I notice Emerson came to the post from Capital Group Companies, with over $1.3 trillion in management and holdings in major German industrials and banks <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/C>

Emerson had the hot potato when he was summoned to the German Foreign Minister's office to be raked over the coals about the U.S. spying on German Chancellor Angela Merkel's cell phone <http://www.lamag.com/citythink/citythinkblog/20> Emerson and his wife were both Clinton administration appointees. Would the Ambassador and his wife care to boost the German gold repatriation by tossing their rings into the same smelter that re-cast the ingots of Germany's "original" gold that was the first 5 tonne gold tranche?

I notice Emerson and his wife are members of yet another globalist front, The Pacific Council on International Policy, the chairman of which is Pilgrims Society member Robert H. Tuttle <http://www.pacificcouncil.org/sslpage.as> and http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Robert_H._Tuttle Emerson is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, a direct Pilgrims subsidiary group. Tuttle's wife is quite a piece of work! She's a trustee of California Institute of Technology and is part of the supervision of the J. Paul Getty Trust and is even connected to the late Armand Hammer and Occidental Petroleum, which went short silver just as Pilgrims Society member William Simon led the COMEX board to crush silver after mid January 1980 <http://artdaily.com/index.asp?int> On March 28, 1980, Hammer had a press conference and announced his $119.6 million profit by going short silver. CFR member Andrew Brimmer, a former FED board governor and director of major silver user Du Pont, was also on the COMEX board at that time.

Simon was the Treasury Secretary (May 1974–January 1977) who bombed gold from $200 down to $105 for details see “Treasury Official Lies About Gold” <http://nosilvernationalization.org/107.pdf> Simon was also an IMF director and gold dumping transpired while he was on the board. Tuttle is likely among the less affluent Pilgrims Society members, owning a paltry 15 new automobile dealerships in California and Arizona. He was Ambassador to England, 2005–2009 and holds the usual appointments such as trustee of the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library Foundation.

Germany might be willing to consider such “silver for one fifth of the gold” plan, as they also have capable geologists and historians who can look at this 64 to 1 ratio and see how impossibly skewed it is---all the more so, since gold at $1250 more or less, is priced stupid cheap. The proposal is for the FED to pay about 20.57 percent of its German gold debt in an adjusted quantity of silver. Since President Obama obviously approves of this precious metals price suppression, I additionally suggest, since he says he “has a pen” that he sign two Executive Orders---one, authorizing the NYFED to execute the deal and two, exempting these COMEX eligible silver holders from all capital gains taxation---to incentivize them to join the class-group of silver providers for this unusual, but useful, transaction! I don’t seriously expect this suggestion to have any traction in official circles. But you lousy lowlifes are being shown for what you are---you are history’s worst thieves, and have no intention of making good, and don’t want to even see any potentially viable alternatives offered. I do hold the notion that these fiends would go so far as to sink a cargo vessel or down a passenger jet as reasons why it's "unsafe" to return Germany's gold! However we pray such doesn't happen; let's see if Obama and his pen can help the NYFED out of about 20% of its German gold repatriation obligation. Such a deal should be possible to finalize within six months.

Every tourist reaching Germany by air, highway or by rail should be handed a pamphlet upon reaching German destinations. It would be a brief overview of how thieving central bankers in America have criminally dissipated German owned gold for global gold price suppression objectives. It additionally would mention the major American media conglomerates as willing criminal accomplices in the news suppression taking place regarding this ultra serious matter! I still expect to see a Federal Reserve inspired cartoon somewhere alleging German demands for restoration of their gold to be connected to a "new wave of neo-Nazism!" German groups are often represented at all manner of international festivals. Yes, you have the same feeling I have that if their booth personnel started publicizing to event-goers about the stolen gold, they'd be muzzled or told to leave, probably at the behest of the nearest slithering banker on the board of the local Mental Health Association!

The NYFED has made childish noises about "logistical" challenges to ship the gold to its owners. Far more tonnage is routinely shipped in copper, steel and other commodities. This is another major indicator of theft on their part. Even so, hardly anyone should disagree that a walk through audit of the NYFED vault is way easier than shipping the gold. However, since this also is denied, I can't see any jury other than a packed, stacked, or suborned panel, would not find the NYFED guilty of theft. An audit must now be forced of the underground vaults. There is also no excuse to not audit Fort Knox in conjunction. I leave it to the reader's imagination to surmise what Andrew Jackson would have ordered done to these thieves. It would be in order for them to be extradited to Germany to stand trial for this theft.

It's disappointing to not have any news about German-American groups having any communiqué to issue deploring the major theft against their homeland. The Lutheran Church traces to Martin Luther in 1517. The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America is the largest U.S. Lutheran denomination with about 4 million members. I'm sure the Bible versions they use include the famous "thou shalt not steal" (Exodus 20:15) and could consider taking a stand on this matter. There are 17 German language newspapers being published in America including in New York; Philadelphia; Baltimore; Milwaukee; and Chicago who should, if they haven't done so, feature this critically important story <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Category:German-language> If they've covered it, they should turn up the heat!

Some short responding to this proposal would accuse us of greed---we are trying to force higher gold and silver prices. No, we're trying to see about having a free market take hold. Additionally, increased wealth for gold and silver longs means more observance of Constitutional ideals because most of us aren't globalists.

I don't see what's stopping any mainland European entities or private investors from buying large blocks of gold and silver mining equities just now before the price starts to run wild, because so many people across the world are coming to view that holding dollars is as inviting as leaving one's teenage daughter in lockup with a wild eyed monster in a cellblock. Gold and silver miners should be seen as monetary providers, not mere commodity producers, and setups may be crafted by which investors take dividends from dore or concentrate after refinery processing. With former FED chief Paul Volcker, a Pilgrims Society vice president and head of the Group of 30 central bankers in D.C. "advising" Obama, we may expect barnacle persistent White House support for stalling Germany on return of its justly due gold reserves! Especially as Volcker is a honorary vice chairman of the American Council on Germany <http://www.acgusa.org/index.php?section=about-us-board-of-directors> and clearly his interest is the same as when John Rambo ("Rambo III" 1988) ominously told the Afghan--- "I'm no tourist!" See what he is, is a Rockefeller sponsored gold and silver suppressor originally from Chase Manhattan Bank and Obama will comply!
